BOP selects transfer and Stateside magazine editors

The Board of Publications (BOP) wound up its years business Tuesday with the appointment of Stateside and Transfer editors.

Bob Trager, 23 year-old junior, was selected as Stateside editor after being questioned briefly by the BOP.

Trager, who has served as managing editor of the magazine this semester, was opposed by Claire Hoover.

Hoover, absent from the meeting, has not been seen on campus for a month, and there was some speculation that he dropped out of school.

The Board decided to consider Hoover on the basis of his written statement.

Making reference to a Stateside article which inspired campus-wide controversy, AS Vice President and BOP member Jim Nixon kiddingly asked Trager how he felt about the Tutorial Program.

"Wait until the next issue," was Trager's reply.

Trager was unanimously approved by the BOP.

Edward G. Devlin, current Transfer poetry editor and the only candidate for that magazine's top post, was named editor for the 1965-66 school year.

Devlin stated his editorial policy briefly, adding that "I think Transfer comes out with some of the finest college writings anywhere."

During Trager's questioning period, BOP member Aditja Mukerji asked the BOP at large, "why do we have only one or two applicants each editorship? Does this indicate lack of interest or talent or what?"

Board chairman Bob Rinaldo replied "Well, I can't answer that. Do you have any relevant questions?"

Mukerji did not.

Pickets see McNamara, ask for Viet talks, not bombs

WASHINGTON (AP) — Hundreds marched through Washington, picketed the Pentagon and conferred with Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara yesterday in an interreligious plea for negotiations, not bombs, to settle the war in Viet Nam.

The estimated 800 to 1,000 joining in the "interfaith vigil on Viet Nam" also sent telegrams to President Johnson, North Viet Nam Premier Ho Chi Minh and South Vietnamese Premier Phan Huy Quat urging talks to halt the violence.

After nine leaders of the Protestant, Roman Catholic and Jewish faiths left a 75-minute session with McNamara, Bishop Daniel Corrigan, director of the Home Department of the Episcopal Church, said: "He leveled with us and we leveled with him."

The Pentagon called it "a friendly exchange of views between the religious leaders and Mr. McNamara."

The demonstration began at Mount Vernon Methodist church in Washington. About 600 assembled and marched 3½ miles across the Potomac River by bridge to the Pentagon, picking up more participants en route.

Bearing placards saying "Negotiate Don't Escalate," and "Bombs Are No Way to Parley" they took up positions some distance from three entrances on as many sides of the building.

One counterpicket, who identified himself only as a businessman, marched in front of the group with signs saying among other things: "Running Up the White Flag is Running from Communism;" "Down

With All Reds and Appeasers," and "Continue the Bombing."

Pentagon cafeterias, restaurants and rest rooms were opened to the demonstrators and an Army medical detachment with a doctor and nurse stood by in case they were needed.

Dr. Edwin T. Dahlberg, former president of the National Council of Churches, did most of the talking for the group which saw McNamara.

He said the demonstrators are in complete agreement with the government on the importance of resisting communism, but not on the method of meeting that threat.

"We feel that the bombing is driving us further away from the negotiating table rather than bringing us closer to it," Dr. Dahlberg said.

Rainboots and books

Fraternity peddles lost goods

The frat member shook his head wonderingly at the pair of size 14 rainboots he was supposed to be selling.

A man walked up, tried them on—"I wear size 12," he said—paid 75 cents, and strode happily into the Commons in his new overshoes.

A coed haggled over the price of a sparkling clean thermos bottle. The price tag said 80 cents. She said 60. The salesman insisted, 80. They finally settled on 75, both of them happy with the transaction.

And so it went at Delta Sigma Pi's AS Lost and Found Sale yesterday.

The fraternity was peddling unclaimed articles and books from the Lost and Found Department in Hut T-1 and salesmen found a receptive clientele.

Despite musty weather, dozens of students crowded around the tables in front of the Commons.

After studying the assortment of books, ranging from two Bibles and a hymn book to "Dead Ringer" with a picture of Bette Davis on the cover, many of the bargain-hunters purchased stacks of four or five books.

The volumes—mostly textbooks—were priced to sell fast—60 cents for a $3 psychology book, 25 cents for music books, 15 cents for a new pocketbook dictionary, and one salesman acted as hawked, yelling titles and witty descriptions of the contents.

A tennis racquet, a black and white checkered crash helmet—"Good to use on pledges," one salesman noted—and a crate of two dozen umbrellas were also on sale.

Most of the umbrellas looked good. But one had

'Dignified' protest by profs today

SF State professors, in full academic regalia, will join state college professors in a demonstration protesting "legislative indifference to the needs of the state colleges" in Sacramento today.

The SF State chapter of the American Federation of Teachers is co-ordinating the college's participation in the demonstration. The protest was organized by the AFT chapter at San Jose State.

The professors will demonstrate in front of the capitol building, meet with key legislators, and cap the day's festivities with a press conference, cocktail party and dinner.

Henry McGuckin, president of SF State's AFT chapter and assistant professor of speech, said all state colleges were sending token representatives to the demonstration. He would not predict how many professors from SF State would attend, but added he would be pleased with 20.

Relaxed sex laws needed says SFL

The validity of Judeo-Christian sexual standards was attacked during a group discussion sponsored by the Sexual Freedom League yesterday.

The consensus of the group was a relaxation in laws governing sexual practices is needed to coincide with a contemporary relaxation in sexual standards.

With this consensus reached, the chief topic became the degree to which sex statutes ought to be lessened. A consensus was not reached on this subject.

Stephen Gaskin, general education instructor, questioned the right of governments to make laws concerning sexual activities. He mentioned it is illegal in most states to engage in sexual activities in the living room.

This piece of information brought an immediate response from one woman in the discussion who said, "What if that's the only room you have."

Another woman in the group was curious how far sexual freedom should be carried. She wondered whether laws protecting children, prohibiting incest and guarding marriage should be abolished.

Jeff Poland, a chairman of the Sexual Freedom League, said the League has no official policy on how far sex laws should be abolished.

He said the League wants to "see what people will do if they don't have to sneak around."

Poland then spoke on the "historical perspective" of sexual freedom. He said in the past "sublimation of sensual pleasures was necessary "so you can get something done."

But, Poland continued, in today's society with an average 40 hour week "people have lots of time to spend on sensual pleasures."

Dorm art winners

"Dinner," a graphic illustration by Greg LaFortune that pictured a slobbering monster preparing to devour a blood-oozing humanoid type, drew more crowd interest than any other work in the Residence Halls' Art Show yesterday.

But LaFortune's work failed to win any official recognition in the show that attracted over 400 visitors.

The show's biggest winner was Hans Halberstadt who took first prize, two seconds and a third place in the photography division. His abstract "Photograph Photogram," was judged the best work in a large collection of photograms and photographs. A photogram is a non-representational photograph.

Other first prize winners were "Housewife's Market," a drawing by Sue Martin; "Construction No. 3," a sculpture by Jamie Brandt; "The 7 Hour Sweat," an op-art painting by Richard Michael; and "Textile Untitled," a mixed media offering by Sarina Oppenheim.

A question had been raised as to whether James Hill's sculpture, "Masturbation" could be entered in the show. Hill voluntarily solved the problem of taste by changing the name of the work to "Oedipus Defeated."

There were no cash prizes for the winners.

Workshop offers 3 operas Sunday

The Opera Workshop will present three operas Sunday.

Alva Henderson will sing the lead roles, all soldiers, in the three operas.

The program will feature the West Coast premiere of Bucci's "Tale for a Deaf Ear," act two of Massenet's "Don Quixote," and "Dido and Aeneas" by Purcell.

The Workshop productions, directed by Louis Huber and Hugo Melchione, will be presented at 8:30 p.m. in the Main Auditorium. Student admission is 50 cents.

The lost sale

The event serves three purposes—to relieve the Lost and Found Department of its unclaimed items, to help raise money for Delta Sigma Pi and the AS, and to remind students that it's cheaper to check at Hut T-1 after losing something than to buy it back—even at discount prices—at the yearly sale.

Gator nine splits with Sac Hornets

By ROBERT NEUBERT
The long, long season is over.

Closing out its 39-game season on a successful note Tuesday, SF State's baseball team split a Far Western Conference doubleheader with Sacramento State on the home field.

A four-run first inning and clutch pitching by Bob Cavalli gave the Gators the first game, 4-2, but Sacramento's Hornets rallied to take the second, 3-0.

Sacramento came into the makeup doubleheader with a 9-1 FWC record. It clinched the conference championship for the second successive year by sweeping a twin bill from second-place Cal State at Hayward last weekend.

But the Gator horsehidiers were waiting to demonstrate they were not as bad as their 15-22 record indicated.

They proved themselves in the first inning.

On the throw home, Hornet catcher Mike (Pepper) Elorduy allowed the ball to squirt between his legs, and Schultze crossed the plate.

The winning runs were driven across by the next batter, first sacker Les Hearn, who tagged a fastball above his head for a 390-foot triple to right-center.

Cavalli, a junior righthander, gave up a ground single to Dave Podesta in the third for Sacramento's first hit. Elorduy walked and Mike Rezzonico singled to left to load the bases with nobody out. Forceouts at second by Rich Reese and John Olander allowed two runs to score.

Sacramento got three men as far as third the rest of the game, but each time the grim Cavalli was equal to the threat.

After the game, Cavalli complained of not being able to throw as hard as he could. A blister on the middle finger of his pitching hand had opened up in the fourth, but he was able to complete the game.

Mixing his fastball with a slider and curve, the almost impervious Cavalli allowed three hits and five walks. Lefthander Thomas surrendered five hits and a like number of free passes.

The second game was a scoreless duel between two southpaws — SF State's Ron Fell and Sac's Bob Aaberg — until the fifth inning.

Reese, on second after a forceout and a passed ball, scored on an infield single by Olander and throwing error by Cavalli, who had taken over at shortstop.

Sacramento added insurance runs in the sixth and ninth.

With one out in the sixth, Fell gave up three straight bases on balls. Reese hit a pop foul which catcher Martinez dropped, and Reese thanked Martinez by driving a sacrifice fly to center.

In the ninth, the active Reese led off with a slicing double to right. He moved to third as Fell bobbled a bunt by Olander, and scored when clean-up batter Doug DeBortoli singled past the glove of Cavalli.

SF State's last chance to score was in the bottom of the ninth.

With two out, Hearn singled up the middle and Gerald Gray responded with a pinch hit to the same spot. But John De Vos, pinchhitting in his last varsity game, struck out swinging.

The Gators were not particularly mystified by the offerings of the lanky Aaberg, but they failed to come through with key hits like Hearn's triple in the first game.

Although they outhit the Hornets, 8-7, the Gators left 10 men on base. Sacramento left 13 runners stranded, but the three who were not stranded made the difference.
