THEY MADE THE BLUEPRINTS

Although much hot air has passed through the draughting department during idle hours, the pencil pushers under Kaz Goto whose work is the link between a need and the actual fulfillment of that need, have turned out practically every plan and sketch for all the Center improvements. Outstanding plans have been for all the Service Division departmental offices, hospital improvements, Center Bowl, wading pools and Army needs.

THE LUMBER YARD CREW

To meet the demands of the carpenters for a constant supply of needed lumber, a miniature lumber yard was created in the warehouse section.

The warehouse crew under Foreman Goro Moriyama was responsible for checking in, sorting, tabulating and checking out this lumber. Probably the biggest issue of lumber from this miniature yard was for the large shaded area. 300,000 board feet of lumber were used at the checkup on September 1.

WITH---

HAMMER AND TONGS

With the ability to hit a nail straight being the only requisite for a carpenter, 79 recruits, mostly novices, were quickly recruited to carry on the construction work where the building crews had left off.

This number was divided into two crews, an "inside" and an "outside" crew. An endless stream of office furniture, recreation equipment, apartment furniture, class equipment, besides 70 lockers, were turned out by the inside crew under the foremanship of Min Saito and Bill Yamamoto. Besides the hospital improvements, their biggest job, the outside crew under Ben Yoshida constructed the Center Bowl stage, the fire house, installed clothes lines on every barrack, and made improvements for the Army. Total amount of lumber used up to September 1 was 250,000 board feet.
