Class Transit

Many Cal State students have spent long hours commuting to and from campus. Rome Lester, a liberal studies major, described her commute experience as frustrating, but worthwhile.

"I drove from Martinez. It takes about an hour each way. The construction on the roads was incredible. There was never a route I could use that didn't have it. It was even up near the campus, on the freeways, everywhere. The commute became just one more hassle in my life, but on the bright side it was also my 'alone' time.

Being a parent, it's hard to find time alone, so my drive to Cal State became a time for solitude. It was a time to gather my thoughts. That aspect was great. Sometimes I even looked forward to it, but by the end of the year I was so busy that the commute was more of a frustration than anything else.

All in all, though, I feel like it was worth it. Driving here was sure better than driving into San Francisco. I'm really grateful that I didn't have a Bay Bridge commute; still, the drive to Hayward seemed very long sometimes. I would have given anything to live just five minutes from campus and not have to drive, but I guess I should be grateful that I was able to get here at all."

Ken Giroud, a computer science major, has experienced long commute hours.

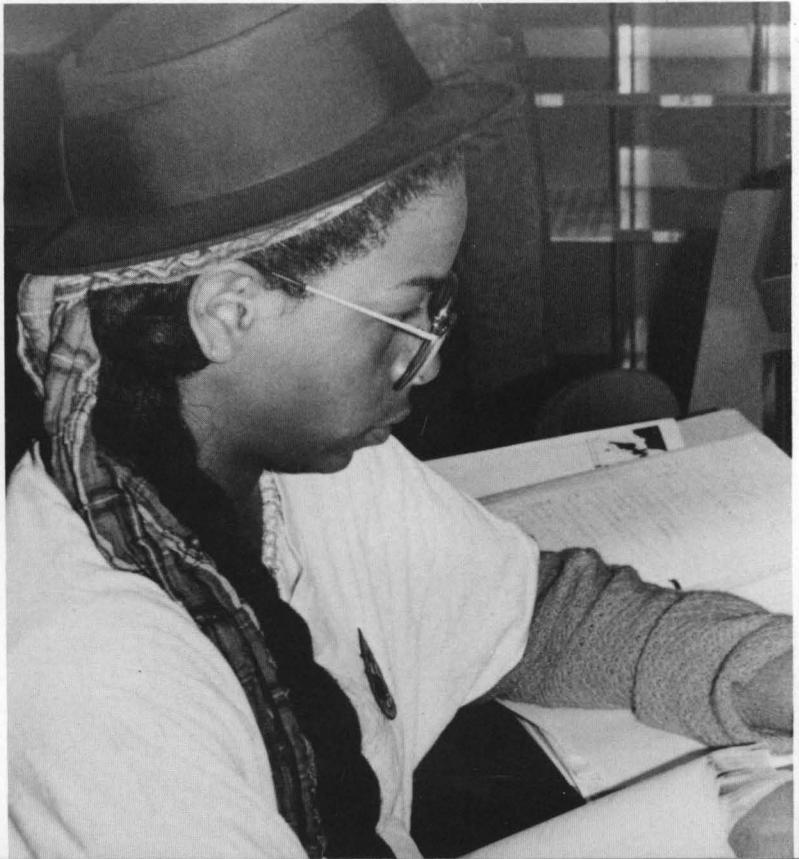

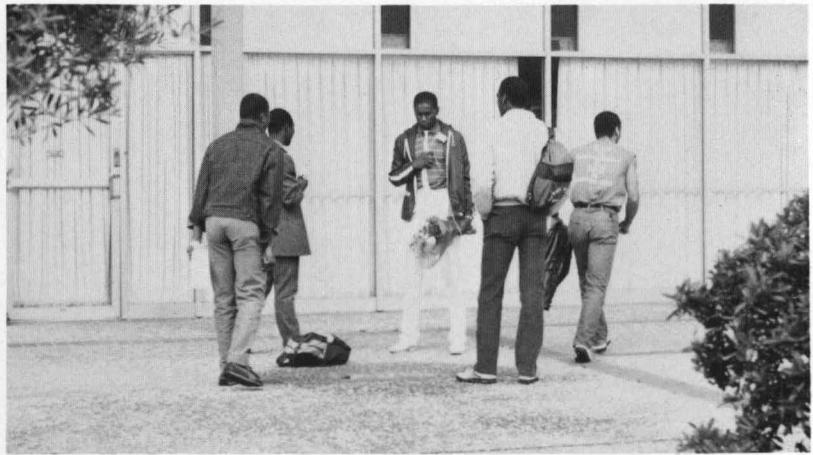

"I live in San Francisco and used mass transit to Cal State. First I rode a bus to the Bart station. That took about 30 minutes. Then I would wait five or ten minutes for the Fremont train. Once I got on the train for the 'luxury' part of the ride, I usually read a book, but if I got bored with that I could always watch the weirdos. Sometimes, if I had a test, I would study. I also worked on programs because I only had so many minutes to spend at school.

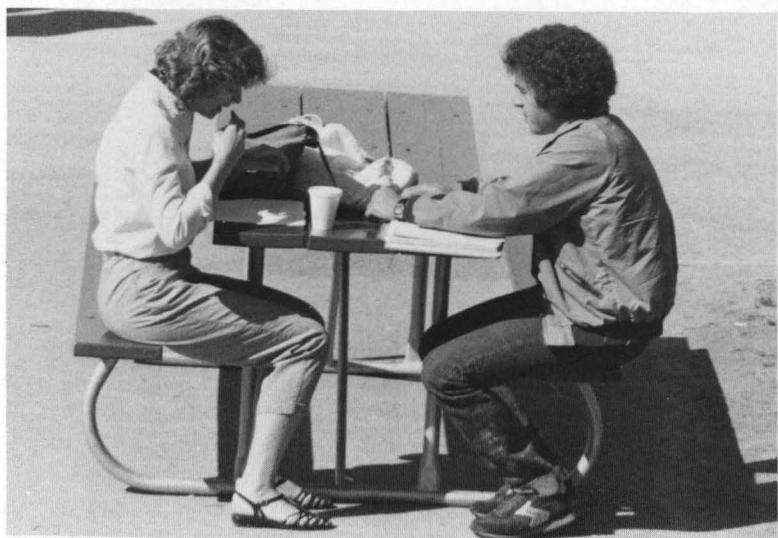

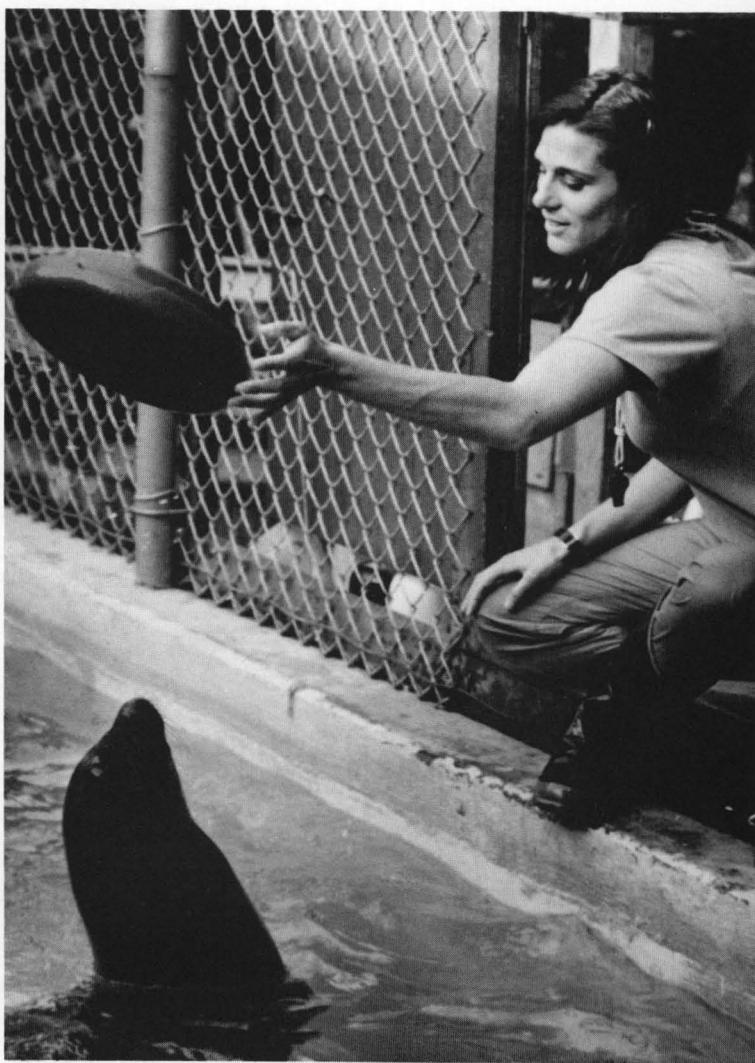

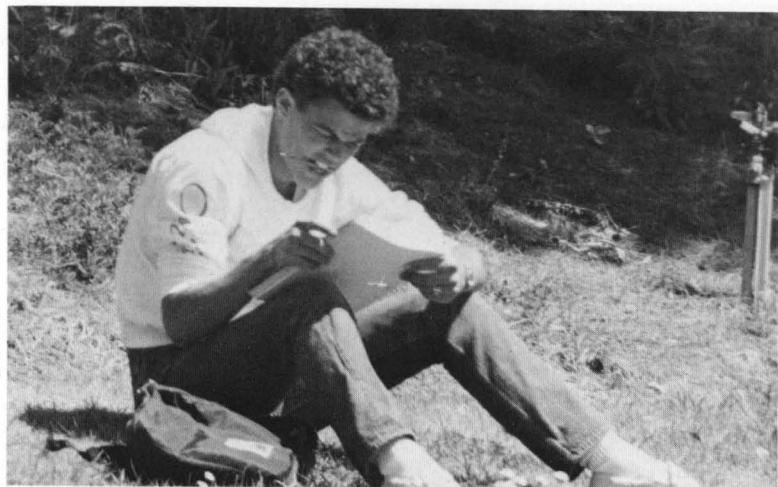

On a good day the Bart ride took one and a half hours. Then I had to take the bus from the station up the hill to campus. The only bad thing was that on the weekend the buses only ran every hour or two. I thought I out-foxed the system by keeping my bike in a Bart locker, so I could ride it up the hill instead of waiting for the bus. It was a really nice bike, but it was stolen right out of the locker; so I just had to forget about coming to campus on Saturday or Sunday.

Commuting was worth it for me because I was able to get into the program I wanted. I would have had to wait a year if I had gone somewhere else."

Bottom: Outdoor Sculpture Show — Sculpture by Richard Williams of Cal State Hayward, "The Eye of the Beholder." "The essence of sculpture is to intrigue the viewer, not just head on, but from every angle."

Sports

Cal State Hayward's intercollegiate athletes came through with a very successful 1983-84 season. The Pioneer athletes earned eighteen individual All American honors, including two national championships. Three Northern California Athletic Conference titles also were brought home. In addition, three Cal State coaches received coach-of-the-year awards.

Organizations

Organizations at Cal State are becoming more active than ever. This year there were 71 student organizations recognized by the university. The various clubs, fraternities and sororities offer students a group to identify with and a way to meet new friends

Media

The campus media at Cal State are very active. The university newspaper, The Pioneer, is published every Tuesday and Thursday. The yearbook, Elan, is put together during spring quarter, and the radio station, KSUH, broadcasts Monday through Friday. Escape, the campus magazine, is distributed free towards the end of spring quarter.
