"THESE four concerts must rank as among the most attractive features of several musical seasons in this city. That is due, first of all, to the significance of the music and, secondly, to the fact, judging by yesterday's performances, that the interpretations are by tried and proven musicians of the first rank, who are familiar with this repertory and obviously in love with their task. The choice of the last ten Beethoven quartets for this series is a wise one and very profitable to the public. . . . The audiences warmed quickly to the music and to the interpreters. Few are the gatherings which have shown such intentness and pleasure in the performances."
