

Thursday.

Dear Eleanor.

Your very welcome letter, although brief, announcing your return home from abroad and stating it to be your purpose to join your people at Monterey during the present week, and kindly inviting me to accompany you, is just received. I would exceedingly like to avail myself of your invitation, but will have to forego this pleasure, as it is necessary that I should be in the City on Monday next, having arranged to give a musicale at my apartments on the evening of that day. The best musical talent of San Francisco will participate, and to further assure the success of the entertainment, Messrs A. J. Bancroft & Co. have very kindly

Papaw sent up to me, give him our love - Emma has written to Maud by this mail - not having the time I've no paper - There is no water for Mary to fish in and it's very stupid for him - Sam follows anyone - and the Schlesenger boy is his size - he universalizes the Sam and engages affairs and is contented but it's a weariness for Mary - and the meals are scantier than the Aikens - Will you look on the window seat in my room and find a
