

December 7th, 2020

Santa Clara County is going into another lockdown order due to the rising cases of COVID-19 in the county and in the states. It's extremely concerning as it seems that we're experiencing the same situations as we did in March, only that it's way worse now. Every day there is something more concerning. I worry for my friends and family as well as strangers who have essential positions in healthcare and other essential fields that aren't talked about as much in the public.

As other countries are seeing little to no cases of COVID in their areas, the United State's cases keep growing and will still, unfortunately, continue to grow as the holidays approach. Ideally this won't happen, but there is such a pattern in the United States that would be no surprise. As of today, there are 1.5 million cases of COVID in the United States with 285,000 deaths. It's extremely disappointing to see that a large part of the United State's population isn't taking these COVID restrictions and regulations seriously, while there are thousands of individuals who are risking their lives to save others.