Los Angeles Examiner
CHARACTER QUALITY AMERICAN FIRST ENTERPRISE
OFFICE OF THE PUBLISHER
BROADWAY AT ELEVENTH ST., LOS ANGELES

July 27, 1932.

Miss Julia Morgan,
Merchants Exchange Bldg.,
San Francisco, California.

Dear Miss Morgan:

I am ready to put the other housekeeper in whenever you get her, and I am also ready to get rid of Williams. He never knows what arrives and Heaven only knows what he does with it.

I have complained about things that could not be found and that he failed to notify me of, and others have had the same experience.

Mrs. George Hearst was up at the ranch with the grandchildren and she bought a lot of stuff in Los Angeles for their Birthday. She was inquiring for it and nobody knew anything about it.

So they had their Birthday without it, but by persistently inquiring they managed to find it five days after the Birthday, although it had arrived the day before the Birthday.

It looks as though we should change people every once in awhile, and we had so much success changing Rossi that I think we better change some more.

Sincerely yours,

W. R. Hearst #
