"The bittersweet joy in sorrow"

"A Moment in Time"

"Those happy faced American children with Japanese faces"

Obedience to parents was a salient part of their culture.

Their energy was boundless.

Their enthusiasm was catching.

Tried and tested by frustration and denied freedom for a period of time, they emerged not with assumed loyalty but with proven loyalty.

Better to be interned than endangered.

Their bubbling enthusiasm was invigorating.

Tested in the cauldron of discrimination, ostracism and evacuation they emerged ~~tempered~~ with ^{their} determination to be good American citizens tempered like stainless steel.
