

Dear Miss Morgan,

We are proceeding with the terrace and getting along well.

The sketches for the bridge and bridge house are about done.

It's going to be sort of dull up here when we have no more plans to do.

Yan & spoke of a moving picture theater. I think that would be fine.

Suppose we make it a general entertainment hall. We could have dances there as well. The seats need not be fixed. I wish the billiard tables could go there too. Nobody wants to go away over to the Bend at night.

Perhaps we could make a two story hall - billiard tables on one floor - moving picture and dance hall on the other.

Maybe that is too much. No - a problem.

To get away from architecture we had a big event last night. The dogs got a porcupine and the porcupine got them. It was awful. Two of the dogs had stickers all over faces and in their ^{mouths} and noses - also on their legs and chest. It took us two hours to get them out and it was bloody work.

This morning one of the dogs was still sick and we found two more stickers, hidden in him - one in his leg and one in his chest

The doctor X-rayed him and got them out.

Tonight all is peace, but I have declared a vendetta against porcupines. The reward is one dollar per head until the beasts are exterminated in this neighborhood.

Those poor dogs with a perfect full beard of spines were a shocking sight.

They are pretty good pups. They stood all the pain without a whimper. I wouldn't have done it - and of course Marion wept all through the performance

We are afraid to let the dogs out of our sight because they seem to be filled with ideas of revenge while they will actually be filled with more sticklers of the porcupines get them. And there is always a chance of the injury being so bad that the dog has to be killed.

Just now the porcupines are being killed. The first two corpses have just been delivered - two dollars worth.

I hope I will be called upon to spend a hundred dollars this way Sincerely W R B Frost
That's all the news.
