

Dear Patricia:

I've been kicking myself for two days for my stupidity. Without being able to work, you are doing one of two things - running out of money or cutting into your bank reserve. Neither should happen. My reason for leaving a note asking you to phone was I wanted to put the contained bill in to your hands personally rather than trust it to your outdoor mail box.

Then, yesterday it developed that I need answers to a couple of questions. I'll have to go back to my Menlo place in the next three days. On one of these, if you have the time I can show the place to you. So I'd pick the day that you prefer. I have some business to transact there too, but that will take too long to ask you to wait around, so I'll go another half day but it can be any day. However, on the day I do take you up, we could discuss some of the things we need to do in preparation for the International Platform Association joint. Or - and this is purely optional with you - we could do this during another breakfast. - this morning if you're in early enough - though if you return home this A.M. you'll doubtless have had breakfast.

However, I'm not just wanting to take up more of your time. Though the breakfast latching is always out - and I enjoy every minute of your company - I know you wish and want to honor them, believe me. I just don't want you to have to run out of resources and I will need to know which day will be best for you to go to Menlo.

Affectionately

Carl
