

Lupe Anguiano

---

From: [REDACTED]
To: [REDACTED]
Sent: Sunday, March 02, 2008 9:19 AM
Subject: THE EPA

Maybe it's time for someone like Barbara Boxer to ask some serious questions about the EPA's work ethic and commitment when it comes to The Halaco Sight on Ormond Beach. Maybe the snail's pace of action they are taking on solving this problem is reflective of a general disdain for protecting the environment in California. Halaco is the equivalent of a patient in the emergency room having a heart attack and the doctors are offering an electrocardiogram next month. It is ridiculous. Also if there is a curve in every industry whereby the first generation of anything takes longer and is more expensive than the subsequent generations, why is the EPA saying that the Halaco clean-up will take just as long as a project they worked on 20 years ago. Why aren't they developing better and faster methods of cleaning up waster and making places more habitable than they were 20 years ago. Why aren't they getting any better at doing their job? How can all those food growers in the immediate vicinity of Halaco continue to operate without anyone questioning the effects on the food that is being grown?

Jean Anker

In a message dated 3/1/2008 10:42:22 P.M. Pacific Standard Time, [REDACTED]

---

Delicious ideas to please the pickiest eaters. Watch the video on AOL Living.

3/2/2008