Dear Miss Morgan :

I have your letter of February 4th.

I am doubtful about the pergola. I would think perhaps caryatids or perhaps tall posts more or less plain in new art manner.

The lights should throw down on the nearest court-- not across the yard as now. Perhaps there should be an elbow, thus :

The posts should be higher than at present. The wall, too, should be two or three feet higher, eliminating the wire mesh.

It would be well if we could have a row of posts in the middle of the yard between the courts, but this will probably be difficult and possibly undesirable as they would interpose obstacles.

I think we can get along with the outer posts and with strong lights. The elbow could hold two lights or even three.

Sincerely,

W. R. Harsh
