

It is thought that many Japanese Americans faced the embarrassment ^{and humiliation} of being considered traitors to the country they called their own plus the stress and strain of early confinement and the urban fear that their actions were not the determining factor in how they would be located.
The determining factor was and would continue to be their ancestors.

~~Peaceful, tranquil polite people~~

It bugged slightly from the waist every time he said "thah you" as though the words "thah you" pulled a string that bent the body.

The tie between parent and children was so strong and so binding that rarely did you ever hear a child ever a ten years answer his parents with ays, seeds, definer or entissessan Always there was a feeling of respect
