

entrance gate. The pace of things was building fast because more than a dozen vehicles were parked in the vicinity of the managers office I noticed upon arriving back at the building I would occupy.

Once inside of the office I spent the following half hour pulling desks and chairs into useable locations and unpacking office supplies to see what I had to start with. Seating myself at one of the desks which I had placed close to a window for added light and ventilation, I began to read page by page every bulletin, directive and manual that had been given to me by the managers secretary.
