

I did not expect to start 2020 experiencing a worldwide pandemic of COVID- 19. When it first started I did not really think much about it since I was still on campus walking back and forth from my friends dorms and my apartment. I was cautious but not really scared of the situation since not many people were on the streets. As time went on, more rules about this shelter in place came on and it became a worrisome problem for my family and I. I decided to move back home

(San Francisco) and be stuck with my family so they didn't have to worry about me being safe in San Jose. I haven't left my house since the start of April and I can only go up to the roof to absorb sunlight and exercise a little bit on the daily. The only social interaction I have is with my family and the people who deliver food to me whenever I order on DOORDASH. I feel like I've been so crazy being stuck at home and really hope this ends soon so I can enjoy the feeling of going out to hang with friends. A lot of people are like the government is giving us a lot of money for this pandemic but I rather have the freedom of going out again over free money.
