Fresno watercolorist, Rollin Pickford, will be featured in a retrospective exhibition which will focus on the artist's stylistic development. The exhibit, curated by his son Joel, will include an overview of works dating from 1940 to the present. The work has been selected from the more than 13,000 watercolors the artist has produced over his long career and affords Museum visitors the opportunity of 'revisiting' many familiar views of Fresno and the surrounding landscape. This will be the artists' fourth solo exhibit at the Fresno Art Museum, the last having been mounted in the same two galleries in March, April, and May of 1989 and where Pickford served as Artist in Residence in the Museum's Childspace Gallery. He was active in the founding of the Fresno Art Center (now the Fresno Art Museum) and the informal group of Fresno watercolorists known as "The Tuesday Group." The current exhibition coincides with the publication of a full color, hard bound book of Pickford's work by The Press at California State University Fresno.

EARTH, FIRE AND STONE: MASTERWORKS OF PRE-COLUMBIAN MEXICAN SCULPTURE FROM THE STRATTON COLLECTION

Permanent Installation

Tues., September 8, 1998 - Sun., August 15, 1999

The Hans Sumpf Gallery of Mexican Art

Ancient clay sculpture from what is known today as Central Mexico comprises this exhibition drawn from the Kenneth E. Stratton Collection. All of the sculpture on display was made before the Europeans entered the New World. The exhibit presents 108 objects representing fourteen cultures which date from 500 to 2,500 years in age. The peoples of Mesoamerica had diverse pantheons with an almost bewildering number of deities. These gods and goddesses were associated with natural phenomena with emphasis given to the earth, celestial bodies, fire and water. As an agricultural people, the earth was given special attention as it was thought to be the provider of sustenance and was believed to be the origin of humanity itself. Mesoamerican people paid homage to the sacred earth, interring their dead within its confines, ritually making supplications to it. These offerings ranged from human sacrifice to miniature effigies and exotic materials. This exhibition presents the sculpture of the Mesoamerican people which may have been their most precious and enduring offerings to the earth as evidenced by the craftsmanship and beauty of the work.
