To California State College at Fullerton Graduates of 1968:

On behalf of the entire faculty and staff of this college, I congratulate you who are receiving a degree tonight. I am sure you have earned it. Some of you have been here a relatively short time as transfers, either undergraduates or graduates. Among you are many members of our first full freshman class.

I commend you not only for your scholarship, but for the activities and institutions in which you have participated and which you have helped to build. This college is becoming known and respected in many fields—speech, debate, music, fine and performing arts, journalism, athletics and others, and for its effective and constructive student government. At some institutions student government is regarded as play acting. Here it has meaning and importance as a full partner in college development.

We have concerns here for the disadvantaged, and for inequality and injustice; we have taken positive steps to demonstrate that concern, and we started this prior to the tragic assassination of Martin Luther King which resulted in much activity on many other campuses. I commend you for these concerns.

One of the sorry aspects of higher education this past year has been the extent to which students, and even faculty, at some institutions have violated the law or college and university rules and then have demanded amnesty. There may have been, in rare instances, campus situations which justified civil disobedience, but one who violates a law or rule because conscience dictates must, in a lawful society, accept the penalty of law as the price of calling attention to the alleged inequity. He who demands amnesty proves himself a cheap seeker after power or notoriety whose ideas have apparently little value even to himself.

We have had no violation of law and order at this college. Further, we continue to find it possible through reasonable discussion to change rules and develop new ones without threats or demonstrations, with their inevitable penalty. For both your respect for law and order, and for the way in which we have been able to work together in developing policies and rules, I commend you.
