

One of my biggest takeaways from the shelter in places is to never take time or the little things in life for granted. As someone who goes to the store a few times a week because I love to cook, it has now become a chore and I do not enjoy it as much. It is a hassle going, disinfecting all the groceries, worrying about people getting to close or food being sold out. How my fiancé and I wanted to control the times we went to the grocery store was to start our own garden. We have always wanted to start our own garden but never made the time for it. The current circumstance encouraged us to take the time to do the things we love and not take anything for granted. It has been difficult times but we have found love in gardening and starting our own little plant family.