

INTRO- DUCTION

To hear it from the "powers that be", punk rock died in the early 80s, then reappeared suddenly in 1991 with Nirvana and again around 1993 with Green Day, then suddenly disappeared again, or "grew up" with the winning of Grammy Awards and being invited to dine at the master's table. Nothing could be further from the truth. Like it or not, punk is still around and chugging along, for better or for worse. This is a small document of but a few of the thousands of bands flying the punk banner, whether by choice, or because it's in their natural inclinations. These bands span the globe and vary their styles from straight up thrash to something on the verge of heavy metal.

Whatever the case, live they destroy(ed). I've attempted to capture some of that energy here on film. Hopefully it was successful.

Last I heard, none of these bands are whoring themselves out for tennis shoes company festivals or turning their songs into jingles for luxury cars. And hopefully that will never happen.

At first this was going to be a one off issue, but as it came together more and more, I've decided to keep it going, and have some fun with it. Plus, I have about 15 plus years of negatives to scan through, and that pile grows more and more. So stay tuned...

First and only printing of 100 copies. No more no less.

Silk-screened cover by Met Plezier. Worth the price of admission alone!
