Message from the Alumni Board

Happy New Year!

Thomas R. Hoeber

The Cal State Hayward Alumni Association extends best wishes as we start our new fiscal year and gear up for a new school year. This is a time for renewal and new vision, and on behalf of the Alumni Association Board of Directors I invite you to join with us in planning an exciting new year.

First of all we want to recognize two individuals who have served the alumni faithfully on the board. Gina Johnson, who served on the board for the last five years including a stint as chair of the Membership Committee, has recently gotten married (congratulations, Gina!) and did not seek reelection to the board as she undertakes her new life. Gina's spirit, enthusiasm and dedication have been a bright light on the board, and we will miss her. We also want to express our deep appreciation to Monica Pacheco who is continuing on the board but is stepping down as president. She has had a great year in office and has guided our ship through some challenging times and brought us to a safe harbor as we start the new year. Thank you, Monica, and congratulations, by the way, on your new position as executive director of Cal State Hayward's University Union.

One of the Alumni Association goals for this year is to expand the number of members on the board. At this time there are four positions we want to fill. We are looking for people who are graduates of Cal State Hayward and members of the Alumni Association; who have expertise in areas valuable to the Alumni Association; who have stature, leadership and visibility in the community; and who have an ability to contribute time and money to Alumni Association activities and functions. This is a great opportunity for some of our star alumni to give back to the campus and to serve our 90,000 alumni. If you are interested in discussing service on the board give me a call at (510) 885-2839 or talk to any of our board members who are listed on the Web site www.csuhayward.edu/alumni.org following the History and Organization link.

All alumni, whether members or not, are invited to the exciting events coming this fall. Please mark your calendar now for: the 8th Annual Golf Tournament on Aug. 30; two networking events on personal finance Sept. 14 and Oct. 5; and the Awards Gala Oct. 29. Watch your mailbox for details or call us at (510) 885-2877.

Our new year is going to be exciting. Join us!

Man with a Mission

By Donna Hemmila

Andrew Galvan's story began more than 200 years ago when a young Ohlone-Bay Miwok boy walked through the doors of Misión San Francisco de Asís and was baptized a Christian.

Liberato Culpecse, Galvan's great, great, great grandfather, was one of the hundreds of American Indians the Spanish rounded up from the surrounding countryside to build and sustain the adobe San Francisco church now known as Mission Dolores.

Galvan, who earned a bachelor's degree in history at Cal State Hayward in 1986, can trace the milestones in his ancestor's life through the old mission records. Fourteen-year-old Liberato was baptized in 1801, married and widowed, and in 1818 was allowed to move across the bay to Mission San Jose in what is now the city of Fremont. There he planted the family tree when he married an Ohlone woman, Galvan's great, great, great grandmother.

That's what the written documents show. But there are no first-person accounts to tell Galvan what Liberato felt. "What was his life like before the Spaniards invaded?" Galvan wonders. "What did he really think about those padres? I don't really know."

Making History

Sitting in the Mission Dolores chapel as tourists browse the ornate altars and Ohlone ceiling paintings, Galvan says he thinks about Liberato a lot, especially since he started his new job.

Galvan, who feels passionately about the connection to his people's history, made history himself on Feb. 1 when he became curator of Mission Dolores, the first American Indian to oversee a California mission.

He jokes about hanging a banner outside that reads "Under New Management."

As curator he has the prodigious responsibility for running the daily operations of an historic site and museum that is also a working neighborhood church. That means learning everything from how the garden drip system works and where they store the toilet plunger to the centuries of church facts and artifacts woven into the fabric of San Francisco history.

Galvan has two goals for his tenure as curator: to tell the accurate story of his ancestors and to give that story an academic slant.

Most people associate mission history with the early Spanish pioneers. The Ohlones and other peoples who lived in communities surrounding the missions are often left out of the story or portrayed only as victims of forced labor.

"Their native world was being overwhelmed," he says. "The environment was changing. The flu and measles epidemics were very destructive. It was a time of survival and they came into the missions to survive." But, he maintains, that's not the whole story.

"The mission was built by and for Indians," Galvan says proudly, and he's determined to tell that neglected history.

He has planned a series of "Andy Events," open houses where the public will see demonstrations in arrow making, basket weaving and other native crafts and will hear educational presentations. The first one, scheduled for Aug. 7, featured talks by two prominent writers of Ohlone culture and history, Malcolm Margolin and Randall Milliken.

Born an Indian

Galvan has always been aware of his Mission Indian roots and traces his lineage to four groups: Bay Miwok, Plains Miwok, Patwin and Ohlone.

"The missions, in many ways, are places of pilgrimage for me and many members of my family," says Galvan.

Born in 1955, he grew up during the civil rights movements of the '60s when he says it was great to be an Indian, the term he prefers rather than Native American or indigenous people. His public school classmates were curious and impressed with his ancestry.

In 1964 Galvan saw firsthand what it meant to fight city hall in the name of preserving his people's heritage.

"In the mid-60s my father, Phil Galvan, led the way to stop the desecration of Ohlone culture under the bulldozers of development and called for preservation of the Ohlone Indian Cemetery," Galvan says.

His father, fought successfully to keep Interstate 680 from being driven through the middle of the Ohlone cemetery in Fremont. The Diocese of Oakland subsequently deeded the two-acre burial ground to the Ohlone people after his father incorporated the tribe.

"This is the only time, that I'm aware of, that a piece of mission property has been returned to the Mission Indians," says Galvan. Later the cemetery would play a significant part in his life as a historian. After graduating from CSUH, Galvan worked as a consultant and native monitor on construction sites to protect cultural artifacts and human remains unearthed by bulldozers.

In 1995, he founded Archaeor with archeologist Richard Thompson. Housed on the campus of Ohlone College, the business specializes in cultural resource management and reburial of human remains such as the 311 prehistoric skeletons recovered at a commercial development site in Fremont. Galvan reburied those prehistoric Californians along with other skeletons recovered from Northern California excavations in the Ohlone cemetery his father fought to save.

While dividing his time between Archaeor and Mission Dolores, Galvan still finds time to lecture on California missions and Indians. He's a member of the California Mission Studies Association and a founder of the California Missions Foundation.

Rhonda Hopson Clearing the Hurdles

By Nancy Ackley

Rhonda Hopson has cleared a lot of hurdles – figuratively and literally – during her 34 years.

She has achieved success in the classroom as a student and a teacher, in her personal life as a daughter, wife and mother and in her career as a student athlete and military officer.

The 2004 inductee into the Cal State Hayward Athletic Hall of Fame was Rhonda Colvin when she attended the university and competed as a record-setting hurdler on the track and field team.

“My times kept getting faster each year,” she says of her athletic accomplishments. Her speed and form made her the Nor Cal Athletic Conference champion in the 100-meter hurdles in ‘89, ‘90 and ‘92.

Her multiple first-place finishes earned her recognition as the 1992 Nor Cal Athletic Conference’s track and field Woman Athlete of the Year. Hopson still holds the NCAA Division II record in the 100-meter hurdles, and twice she competed in the U.S. Olympic Track and Field Trials, competing in the 100-meter hurdles in ‘92 and ‘96.

Pioneer Bound

Born in Waukegan, Ill., Hopson moved to California with her parents and two older brothers at age 5 when her father, a chief petty officer in the U.S. Navy, was stationed at the Alameda Naval Air Station. Her mother became a correctional officer at San Quentin State Prison in Marin County. The family eventually moved to Vacaville where Hopson graduated from Vanden High School in 1987.

When her mother’s health began to fail, the budding track star decided to look for a college with both strong academic programs and a good track program.

“My mother was sick, and I wanted to be close to home, but I still wanted to compete,” Hopson says.

Cal State Hayward offered what she needed, and one of her cousins knew the Pioneer track coaches at the time, Willie White and Bob McGuire, who encouraged her to attend their university.

“I was not the best hurdler at the time,” she says of her freshman season, but she had the speed that sent her to the national championships as a member of the relay team. During her college years she lived away from home in Hayward during some quarters and commuted from home other times, depending on how much her mother needed her.

In the Army Now

Her mother’s declining health was an ongoing concern. Hopson began thinking she might need to find alternate support for her college education if her mother took a turn for the worse.

“I wanted to make sure I could finish college, so at the end of my freshman year I enlisted in the Army Reserve,” she says.

That summer she completed boot camp and an advanced initial training program and trained to be a chaplain’s assistant.

Hopson was introduced by Willie White, left, and Bob McGuire as a 2004 inductee in the CSUH Athletic Hall of Fame. She was the 1992 Nor Cal Athletic Conference Athlete of the Year and earned All-America honors in 1988, ‘89, ‘90 and ‘92.

"I picked a job I would enjoy and one where I'd never have a bad boss," she says.

That was the second important career decision the young woman made that year. Her first, at the beginning of her freshman year, was deciding between accounting and teaching.

"After my first accounting class, I knew I wouldn't be happy doing that for the rest of my life," Hopson says, adding that she was a very social person who realized she wanted to work with people more than with numbers.

Called Up

Her times on the track continued to improve. Her coaches anticipated even greater success during her senior year, but they could not have predicted what was about to happen next to their young track star and the country.

When the United States began preparing for Operation Desert Storm, Hopson was called up and ordered to report at the beginning of December, just before fall quarter final exams. As it turned out, a chaplain's assistant serving in Colorado asked to go to the combat zone, so Hopson was assigned to fill in for that soldier in Colorado Springs.

"Coaches McGuire and White were nervous because I was going to miss the season," she recalls. "They thought I would come back out of shape."

She didn't. There was not a lot to do in Colorado Springs, she says, so she spent her off-duty time running and came back in June in better condition than when she left.

The circumstances entitled Hopson to a final year of eligibility, so after spending the summer making up the "incompletes" that resulted from her call to active duty, she resumed her senior year in fall 1991. The next spring she was a five-time All-American, winning five firsts at the national championships. At the end of that season, she graduated with a bachelor's degree in general education and prepared to compete in that summer's Olympic trials. She qualified for the semi-finals, ranking among the top 16 women in the nation in the 100-meter hurdles.

Her life continued to improve off the track as well. She landed a teaching position in Vacaville, enabling her to remain near her ailing mother. She also met Derryl Hopson while accompanying her mother to treatments at a Bay Area clinic. He was a dialysis technician, and their first "date" was accompanying her mother and other clinic patients on an outing to Reno. Other dates followed with the young man, who also was serving in the military reserve as a jet engine mechanic for the Air Force.

The couple's first child, Derryl Colvin-Hopson, was born in 1993. Her mother was able to enjoy her grandson for 15 months before she died. Their second son, Anthony, was born in 1998, and she also has a 13-year-old stepdaughter, Aja Marie, who spends summers at their Vacaville home.

Double Duty

Family life was going smoothly until they were caught in the aftermath of 9/11. That fall the two parents were both called to active duty for Operation Iraqi Freedom. They were a little taken aback when their orders directed them to report on the same day — she at 7 a.m. and Derryl at noon. Their sons were ages 9 and 5 at the time.

This time Sgt. 1st Class Rhonda Hopson was assigned to the combat zone. Tech Sgt. Derryl Hopson stayed stateside, close to home at Travis AFB in Fairfield, working on engines for C-5 aircraft, sometimes pulling 10- or 12-hour shifts and relying on family and friends to help care for the boys.

"The year I was away from my family was hard, but if I had to do it over again, I would still enlist," she says. "Would I give up my commitment to serve in the military? No. I did not come back from serving in Iraq saying that I wanted to leave as soon as my hitch was up."

On the contrary, Hopson has changed her military assignment from chaplain's assistant to work in service retention "trying to see how we can keep good soldiers in the military."

She returned home from her 14-month Iraq tour of duty in March, just in time to attend her induction into the Cal State Hayward Athletic Hall of Fame. She returned to the classroom as well, teaching at-risk students in grades seven through 12. This is her favorite assignment, she says, because it is "rewarding to see the progress some students make in just a short time."

These days Hopson runs for recreation — an occasional 5- or 10-kilometer race or sometimes a stint as a hurdler coach. Her son Derryl, now 11, picked up hurdling techniques while watching his mother instruct some high school runners and says he thinks he would like to compete some day. While the future demands of her military service remain uncertain, for now Hopson is content to be helping young people to focus on the finish line and keep on the right track.

Track Notes

Rhonda Colvin was Nor Cal Athletic Conference 100-meter hurdles champion in 1989, '90 and '92, and in 1992 she also took first at the championships in the 400-meter hurdles and 100-meter dash.

She was an All-American in 1988, '89, '90 and '92 and was an Olympic Trials semifinalist in the 100-meter hurdles in 1992 and 1996.

Her 1992 mark of 13.21 seconds in the 100-meter hurdles still stands as the NCAA Division II national record.

Foundation Elects Alum Timothy Silva To Lead CSUH in Private Fund-raising

Wells Fargo executive Timothy Silva has been elected chairman of the Cal State Hayward Educational Foundation Board of Trustees, the principal fund-raising organization for the university.

Silva was elected for the 2004-05 term at a meeting of the trustees on June 27 and will direct the 27-member board in its stewardship of the university's $4 million endowment and in its advocacy for increased private giving to CSUH. Silva, who served as vice chair of the Cal State Hayward foundation board in 2003-04, replaces outgoing board chairman Howard High, technology and public relations manager for Intel Corp.

At Wells Fargo, Silva is senior vice president and regional community development manager serving Alameda, Contra Costa and Santa Clara counties.

"I am both excited and honored to lead such a distinguished group of trustees at a time when private giving to the university can add such value to our students' educational experience," said Silva, who earned his bachelor's degree in liberal studies at Cal State Hayward in 2003.

Silva has been instrumental in assisting with Wells Fargo gifts to Cal State Hayward in support of scholarships and the Wayne and Gladys Valley Business and Technology Center, for which ground will be broken Sept. 30. He also serves on the board of directors for the Economic Development Alliance for Business covering Alameda and Contra Costa counties, the San Jose/Silicon Valley Chamber of Commerce, and the Franklin McKinley Education Foundation in East San Jose.

Other newly elected officers of the board are investor and former PeopleSoft executive Paul Salsgiver as vice chair and ChevronTexaco global manager Doug Uchikura as secretary.

Four Women Athletes Make the Grade

Four members of the Cal State Hayward women's water polo team—Gabriella Keri, Jessica Araujo, Nicole Hamilton and Kim Johnson—have been named to the American Water Polo Coaches Association 2003-04 Women's All-Academic Team.

Keri, a business administration major from Budapest, Hungary, had a 3.68 grade point average, while Araujo, a liberal studies major from San Clemente, compiled a 3.32 GPA. Hamilton, a biology major from San Diego, was right behind Araujo with a 3.31 GPA, and Johnson, an anthropology major from Irvine, had a 3.24 GPA.

The CSUH women's water polo squad, which enjoyed its most successful season in school history with 18 victories under second year coach Lisa De Rossi during the spring of 2004, also received American Water Polo Coaches Association academic team honors by earning a collective grade point average of 2.87.

Gabriella Keri, a member of the CSUH women water polo team honored for its academic muscle, makes a play.

Afghan Governor Asks for CSUH Help To Rebuild Ailing Educational System

Asadullah Khaled, the governor of Ghazni Province in Afghanistan, met with California State University, Hayward President Norma Rees and other university administrators, faculty and students in early June. The meeting was part of his visit to the city of Hayward, which is considering a sister city relationship with the city of Ghazni.

Decimated by 23 years of war, the region is struggling to rebuild its school systems, Khaled told the university representatives. He hopes to establish a relationship with CSUH to help train teachers and professors.

Ghazni had been one of the centers of university education, he said, but schools were closed during the Taliban regime. Since the defeat of the Taliban, 396 schools have opened in Ghazni, the largest province in Afghanistan. It is located about 70 miles southwest of Kabul.

Initial efforts to improve education have included the opening of a teacher-training center, and the central government has given permission to establish a university. Khaled said it was likely a community college would be developed first.

"A relationship like this is important for the continued development of both our cities," President Rees told Khaled. "Our community has a large, active Afghan population, and we have many Afghan students on our campus. As one of the most international campuses in the California State University system, this would be a natural partnership for us. There is a lot we can learn from each other."

Rees suggested one approach would be to have groups of Afghan educators come to Cal State Hayward for training, then return to their home country to teach others there.

Khaled was accompanied on his campus visit by a delegation that included Hayward Mayor Roberta Cooper, other city officials, and Afghan-American leaders from throughout the Bay Area. Among those at Cal State Hayward to greet Khaled were students Soraya Ahmadyar and Hadi Rafie of the Afghan Student Association. Both said their organization would be interested in supporting educational efforts in Ghazni.

California State University, Hayward President Norma Rees greets Asadullah Khaled, the governor of Ghazni Province in Afghanistan, at June 3 campus visit.

CSUH Center Helps Small Businesses

Small business owners from throughout Alameda County have a new resource to help them become more productive. The East Bay Small Business Development Center has opened in Oakland through a partnership with California State University, Hayward.

The university, the U.S. Small Business Administration, and the Northern California Small Business Development Center Network have created the East Bay Small Business Development Center, which offers classes, consulting services, and business planning resources for small businesses. All consulting services are provided to clients free of charge, while courses are offered for a nominal fee.

The center's training and education facilities are located in Cal State Hayward's Oakland Professional Development Center, 1000 Broadway, Suite 109, in downtown Oakland. The East Bay Small Business Development Center's office is located nearby at 475 14th Street, Suite 150, Oakland.

Hayward Campus Set for Growth Spurt

The Hayward campus is embarking on its most ambitious building expansion in 30 years.

Groundbreaking is scheduled Sept. 30 on the Wayne and Gladys Valley Business and Technology Center. Depending on approval of construction bids, work on a University Union annex and expansion of the Pioneer Heights student residence facility could both begin within two months.

The business and technology center, to be located on the lawn between the Science and the Arts and Education buildings, will be named for Wayne and Gladys Valley, whose foundation committed $5 million toward the project. Other funding includes $11.5 million in state bond funds approved by California voters last fall as part of Proposition 47 and $10 million in private support. Last fall, the university community accepted a $600,000 challenge grant from the Kresge Foundation. The university must reach its fund-raising goal for the center by Oct. 1 in order for the Kresge grant to be awarded. Less than $300,000 remains to be raised.

The $10 million annex to the student union will house meeting space, food vendors and a commuter lounge with lockers and rest area. The expansion of the campus residence complex, scheduled for completion in spring 2006, will add 406 beds, doubling the number of students that can be accommodated.

News from the California State Universities

California State University, Hayward is one of the 23 campuses that constitute the largest university system in the world. More than 400,00 students are enrolled statewide in the CSU system. This summary provides news of the CSU system and its other campuses.

CSU System – Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger on July 2 announced the appointment of eight members to the California State University Board of Trustees: Jeffrey Bleich, Herbert Carter, Carol Chandler, Moctesuma Esparza, George Gowgani, Raymond Holdsworth, Melinda Guzman-Moore and student-member Corey Jackson. The board consists of 24 members, 19 of them are appointed by the governor. All appointments except that of student trustee require Senate confirmation.

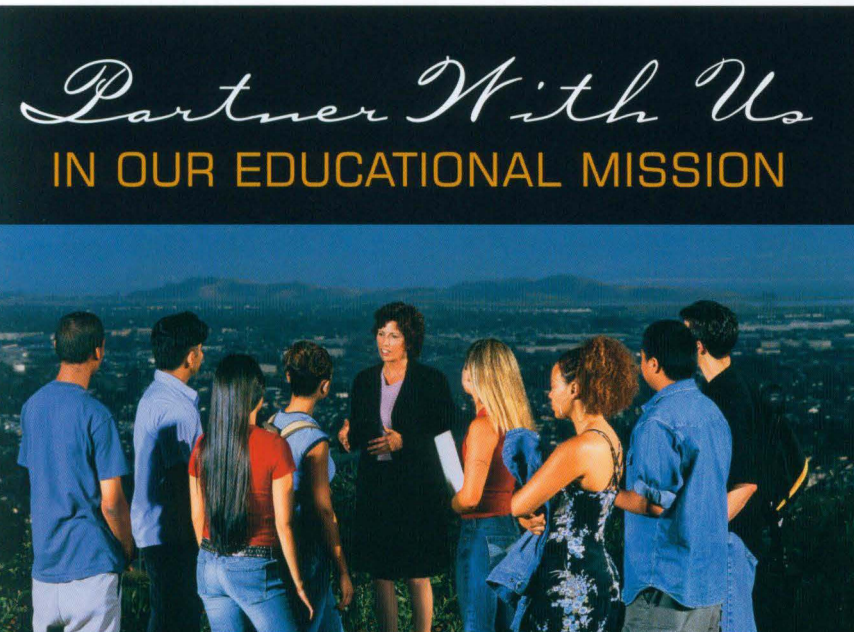

CSU, Humboldt – Humboldt State University has received a $7.4 million gift to expand its energy and forestry research. The gift is from the trust of the late Louis W. Schatz, a plastics industrialist who helped found Humboldt State's Schatz Energy Research Center. About two-thirds of the funding will be used for hydrogen research at the center. The remainder will support forestry research.

CSU, Los Angeles – Three Cal State Los Angeles undergraduates and their professor are studying the characteristics of sea soils in a rare three-year research project. The project is funded by a grant of almost $600,000 from the Office of Naval Research. The sea floor study will help the military, which buries large amounts of cable in the ocean and needs to know the best way to install it. The study also will test the stability of submerged foundations.

CSU, San Marcos – The university received a $7.7 million grant from the First 5 Commission of San Diego County to build a campus child care center. Funding comes from tobacco tax revenue. The center will accommodate 190 children from infants to pre-kindergarten youngsters. Construction is planned to begin in August 2005 and the building to open in early 2007.

CSU, Sonoma – The family of Fred B. Galbreath, a marine insurance executive, has donated a 3,500-acre Mendocino County wildlife preserve, valued at more than $8 million, to Sonoma State University. Galbreath, who once served as lead underwriter for construction of the Golden Gate Bridge, died in 2000 at age 98. Roughly the size of a state park, the preserve will be one of the largest in California's college and university systems. Eventually, the university hopes to establish a biological field station, a conference and retreat center and an observatory.

California Polytechnic State University, San Luis Obispo – A Bay Area trial attorney and his wife have made a $7 million gift to Cal Poly to train math and science teachers. Joseph and Victoria Cotchetts' gift will provide $15,000 stipends over three years to the new crop of teachers - $5,000 for the year each student spends earning a credential and $5,000 in each of the two years they agree to teach in an urban school. As a condition of their gift, the Cotchetts are requiring that low-income, urban schools in the state's largest cities be the beneficiaries. Besides Sacramento, schools in Los Angeles, Fresno, San Francisco, San Diego and Oakland would be priorities.

California State University, Hayward's mission is to provide an academically rich, multicultural educational experience that prepares all its students to realize their goals, pursue meaningful life work, and to be socially responsible contributors to their communities, locally and globally.

Continuing and International Education

- Beginning Fall 2004, Cal State Hayward Continuing Education will offer two professional programs in downtown Oakland that will allow students to earn graduate credit towards prerequisites for a master's degree in either business administration or public administration. CSUH alumni can benefit from a special 15 percent discounted course fee when enrolling in either of these programs' courses.

Cal State Hayward's newest program is a professional Certificate in Business Administration Essentials, designed to give non-business majors an introduction into advanced business disciplines and practices. Students will prepare for greater responsibility in their organizations. The program is comprised of 10 courses in accounting, economics, finance, information systems, management and marketing. All together, the courses satisfy the CSUH MBA foundation requirements and have direct transfer application to many Bay Area MBA programs.

The CSUH Professional Development and Conference Center in Oakland.

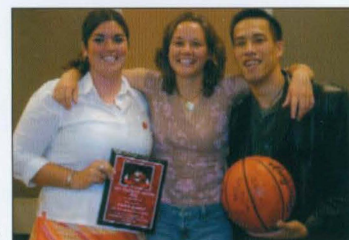

Foundation courses to fulfill entrance requirements for the Cal State Hayward MPA program will also be offered in Oakland. This two-course sequence is an introduction to the full master's program, which will also be offered at the downtown center for those who successfully complete requirements and apply for graduate program admission.

Contact Ronn Patton, the center director, for further details at 510-208-7002 or e-mail rpattton@csuhayward.edu or visit the Web site at www.extension.csuhayward.edu.

Cal State Hayward's Oakland Professional Development and Conference Center at 1000 Broadway is a state-of-the-art training facility with wireless LAN and full audio-visual capabilities in each classroom. The center doubles as a conference facility for the regional business community and provides consultation and training for local small businesses through a grant with the U.S. Small Business Administration.

College of Education and Allied Studies

- Student athletes - Women's basketball player Leah Thornton was named Cal State Hayward Female Athlete of the Year, while Danny Dinh was selected Male Athlete of the Year at the third annual CSUH Sports Banquet sponsored by the Friends of Athletics on June 4. At the same event, women's water polo player and swimmer Farrah Kunkel received the Pioneer Spirit Award.

College of Arts, Letters and Social Sciences

- Derek Jacoby (B.A. '01) won a $2,000 prize offered in the Alumni Choral Composition Competition. A jury of five music department faculty members unanimously selected "Vide Homo" as the winning composition. Alumni from the University Singers joined the combined choirs of the University Singers, Chorus and the University-Community Chorus to perform the work at its premier at the Old Church at Mission San Jose in Fremont on June 5. The Alumni Association and the music department each contributed $1,000 to the prize.

Derek Jacoby joined Marianna Wolff, center, Music Alumni chapter representative, and Kathryn Smith, director of choral activities, at the debut of his prize-winning composition.

College of Business and Economics

- Jay L. Tontz, dean emeritus of the College of Business and Economics, was recognized as an honorary professor of the Academy of National Economy under the government of the Russian Federation in Moscow on May 12. The honor recognized his leadership role in establishing Cal State Hayward's MBA program in Moscow, which began in 1993.
- Stephen Shmanske, professor of economics, explored the business side of golf in his recently published book, Golfnomics. In the 312-page book, released through World Scientific Publishing Co., Shmanske discusses the economics of golf course management, including chapters on course maintenance and the impact of slow play. He also probes the economics of professional golf, spotlighting tournament competition and the measurement of gender discrimination.

Stephen Shmanske

Science

- Roger Doering, assistant professor of mathematics and computer science, is the faculty advisor of the newly founded student branch of the Institute for Electrical and Electronic Engineers. The new club, named IEEE Pioneer Club, plans to sponsor field trips to companies such as Intel and Apple, to hold programming competitions and set up a mentoring program.

Alum Turns Kids on to Science

So far, Sharon Fuller, an educator and Cal State Hayward alum (M.S. Environmental Education, '00), is having a very good year. In March, she was named California's 14th Assembly District's "Woman of the Year." And in June, the San Francisco Foundation honored her as one of this year's 12 Daniel E. Koshland Civic Unity Award recipients.

Each year the Koshland award targets a different community in need. This year it is the Iron Triangle neighborhood of Richmond, Calif. The award winners each receive $5,000 to support a nonprofit of their choice. The foundation awards an additional $240,000, which the awardees must decide how to distribute to improve the community's quality of life.

Fuller, a native of Richmond, is the founder and director of the Ma'at Youth Academy. Named for the Egyptian goddess of truth, the academy strives to be both a catalyst for grassroots community policy advocates and a youth education program.

Assemblywoman Loni Hancock, of the 14th District, said in her address honoring Fuller, "Not only is she training the next generation to help make our communities healthier and safer, but she is also ensuring that more of our urban youth finish high school well-prepared for college-level science and math courses."

The 10-year-old academy is currently leading its high school interns in a study of the effects of mercury contamination in the San Francisco Bay. The area is a popular recreation and subsistence fishing spot for locals. Yet, many of the fish have mercury levels beyond those recommended by the

EPA. The students have surveyed those fishing the polluted waters and have found that despite warnings posted by the county health department, most are consuming more contaminated fish than is recommended.

In the future, Fuller would like to see a more comprehensive study of the cumulative effects of the area's five oil refineries on the community, especially on children.

Fuller has a clear vision for the academy's future: "I would like to see a state of the art environmental center here in Richmond. I would like the academy to be that facility." She views the future center as a place where the community can learn to use both high-tech and low-tech scientific methodology to investigate the environment, culture and history of the bay.

EOP Inspires Dreams

The state-funded Educational Opportunity Program is designed to offer assistance to students who might otherwise not be able to succeed at the university because of educational or economic background. Here are two stories of Cal State Hayward alums that the EOP helped to reach their goals.

Howard Ransom, Jr., president and CEO of New Wave Educational Center in Long Beach, earned a bachelor's degree in Theatre Arts and African-American Studies at California State University, Hayward in 1981. While at Cal State Hayward, he received national attention as one of the top rated collegiate speakers in the nation by winning an unprecedented number of individual speech championships at the district, state and national level.

Ransom

He performed with the Educational Dramatic Troupe and The Berkeley Black Repertory Company, acting in major productions including "Raisin in the Sun." He appeared on TV shows including "The Streets of San Francisco."

He served as assistant director/staff coordinator at the Baylor University National Speech Institute and as assistant director of forensics at California State University, Los Angeles where he developed education and training programs for speech students.

Ransom teaches in the Los Angeles Unified School District, working with at-risk youth in Watts.

Ransom maintains that the key to motivating at-risk youth is getting them to believe that what you expect of them is absolutely possible. To date, he has inspired his students to an unprecedented 90 percent success rate for passing the G.E.D. test, establishing his program as one of the most effective in the nation. Ransom was recognized as the 1997 Educator of the Year by the Young Foundation of America. He also received the Outstanding Service Award and was deemed a Local Hero by the San Bernardino Department of Parks and Recreation for his work with disadvantaged youth.

Leticia Aguilera-Ledesma, received her bachelor's degree in biology from CSUH in 1991 and was an active participant in the EOP program. While a student, she represented the university at the Harvard Summer School Medical Sciences Program. She attended the UC Irvine Pre-Med Summer School in 1990 and was admitted to the University of Southern California School of Medicine in 1992.

Aguilera-Ledesma

Throughout her medical school training, her emphasis has been on providing primary care to under-served urban populations. After finishing her residency at UC San Francisco/SF General Hospital and receiving the Julius R. Krevans Award for Clinical Excellence, Dr. Aguilera-Ledesma was selected as a chief resident for the Family Practice Residency Program. Currently she practices at Bay Valley Medical Group in Hayward.

Though her studies have taken Dr. Aguilera-Ledesma away from East Oakland, the community in which she was raised, she has never stopped trying to "give back." At CSUH she worked as a pre-college counselor at Oakland's Fremont High and was a student mentor for CSUH's Mentoring Program. She also worked with CSUH's HIV Educational Program and was an active member of the Minority Students in Health Sciences club.

the Kingsburg Youth Soccer organization, Kingsburg elementary schools and Leadership Selma.

Terry Treskin, B.A. Liberal Studies ('94), is the assistant to the director of the San Leandro Public Library. Previously, Treskin worked as an administrative assistant for the Development Studies Center and the Public Health Institute.

Treskin

Michael Cutlip, B.A. Studio Art, Minor in Business Administration ('99), is a practicing artist with two solo shows scheduled for 2005. He will be in Palo Alto at the Bryant Street Gallery in February and at the Triton Museum of Art in Santa Clara from October through December. Cutlip switched his major from business to art late in his senior year, and he has never regretted the decision.

Cutlip

Benjamin Sleeter, B.S. Geography ('99), M.A. Geography ('02), has been with the U.S. Geological Survey for five years. He works as a member of the science section of the research and technology team where he says he is allowed to pursue his own research into land cover. He recently married Rachel Trusty, also a geographer at USGS, and they are living in San Leandro.

Fred Biletznikoff, Jr., B.A. Kinesiology ('00), has been appointed as interim head coach of the Central Valley Coyotes, a California arena football franchise. Along with his Coyotes responsibilities, Biletznikoff will continue as offensive coordinator and running backs coach for the Fresno City Rams, where he has worked since 2000. He has been on the coaching staff of Alameda High School and Chabot College.

Christopher Canzonieri, M.A. Anthropology ('01), works for Basin Research Associates and is a cultural resources consultant for the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers on the Guadalupe River in San Jose monitoring the site for harm to cultural and historical artifacts. Canzonieri is now a resident of Danville.

Canzonieri

Sukhy Thethy, B.A. Mass Communication ('01), has been working for the State Compensation Insurance Fund in San Francisco as a human resources consultant since January 2001.

Thethy

Kenneth Naranja, B.S. Communications ('02), is currently a member of AmeriCorps, National Civilian Community Corps, residing at the Washington D.C. campus. Projects he has participated in include the building of homes and working as a teaching assistant and mentor for fourth graders. After completing his 10-month AmeriCorps service, Naranja plans to continue his education with a master's in communication.

Naranja

Chris Thomas, B.S. Chemistry ('02), has recently been promoted to team leader of his formulation and support group in research and development at Impax Laboratories Inc. Thomas joined Impax as an analytical chemist while still a student at CSUH. He is a resident of Hayward.

Thomas

Jessica Cahill, B.A. Mass Communication with an emphasis in broadcast journalism ('03), is working as an advertising sales representative for the Tri-Valley Herald. An aspiring news writer and editor, Cahill plans to eventually move to Southern California to pursue her dream job.

Cahill

Janice De Guzman, B.S. Business Administration ('03), works as a marketing finance analyst in Pleasanton. She hopes to obtain a CPA degree and someday own her own business.

Theatre arts Professor Edgardo de la Cruz, an internationally known director, died July 11 of a heart attack. He was 71. Although he officially retired in June, de la Cruz was scheduled to direct a university production of Shakespeare's "Twelfth Night" at the Edinburgh Festival in Scotland this August and was directing that show and a play for children as part of the annual CSUH Highlands Summer Theatre. He directed six CSUH productions in Slovakia, Cyprus and Scotland during the past 12 years. De la Cruz won the George and Miriam Phillips Outstanding Professor of the Year Award at Cal State Hayward in 1994, and in 1999 the Association for Theatre in Higher Education unanimously selected him as the Outstanding Teacher. Donations in his memory may be made to the university's Department of Theatre and Dance Fund. Checks may be made out to the "Cal State Hayward Educational Foundation" and designated for the International Theatre in the Department of Theatre and Dance. Send to the CSUH Office of University Advancement, Warren Hall, Room 908, 25800 Carlos Bee Blvd., Hayward, CA 94542.

Professor Emeritus John Edward Weidlich, who taught at California State University, Hayward for 25 years, died April 24 at the age of 70 after an extended battle with prostate cancer. He joined the math faculty in 1964 and taught undergraduate and graduate math courses before retiring in 1989. He served as department chair and helped design its committee structure. Weidlich was a research scientist at Lockheed Missile and Space Company, applying mathematics to the study of trajectories and orbits. The family requests that remembrances be sent to the American Cancer Society.
