SAN FRANCISCO STATE COLLEGE

Psst—it's crowded here; waiting lists get longer

The hundreds of students who pushed up to the door of the English Department's office yesterday seeking classes illustrated the great overload in enrollment SF State is facing this semester.

The total number of names on the English waiting list has reached a phenomenal 1500. All English classes are closed.

The pattern is the same all over the college. Since last fall, four schools have had particularly large growth.

LISTS

These are actual enrollment figures, they do not include the long lists of names of people who would like to take more courses.

The English Department has the most acute problems. For Eng. 135, Introduction to the Study of Language, there were 288 students waiting yesterday.

Other courses in high demand include: Eng. 175, Junior Seminar, with 96 waiting; Eng. 182.1, Shakespeare, with 82 waiting; Eng. 200, Graduate Seminar, with 52 waiting; and Eng. 52.1, Poetry, with 71.

PLEAS

Kay House, assistant professor of English, heard all the pleas yesterday at the department office. By noon, she had listened to over 600 and the line still stretched down the hall.

She only admit students to classes by dropping those who had not attended the first two classes of the semester or by allowing several extra students into each class in hopes that some people would drop before the week was out.

Some classes have been able to move to rooms with more seats, all other classes are standing room only.

New sections for a handful of courses have been opened, but unless new faculty staff can be hired no more can be opened.

Caroline Shrodes, chairman of the English Department, hopes to hire a new faculty member immediately.

HONOLULU

"There is a great shortage of competent college English instructors on the West coast," she said, "our only hope is a man that we are trying to contact in Honolulu."

She sent a request to James Wilson, dean of the School of Humanities, yesterday for three new teaching positions for the spring semester.

The high demand for courses in English and other departments around the college caught department and administration members by surprise. Waiting lists only totalled two or three hundred last spring.

The Office of Institutional Studies blames the enrollment crisis on the increase of 1360 students during registration

Daniel Feder, Dean of Academic Planning, sees an obvious need to revise the report from the State College Committee on Curricular Review which establishes the growth rates for the various schools and departments.

The SCOCR report, published in January of 1965, established the growth rates for the various schools and departments for the next five years. Following this set pattern, the English department, for example, was allowed to acquire one and a half new teaching positions since last fall.

Garbage problems plague Commons

"I like garbage" was the comment while not a hundred feet away worked one stooped figure picking up the trash that littered almost every yard of the Commons area.

The refuse that litters the grass areas of SF State has always been a sore point on campus, with faculty and students alike expressing their disapproval.

TWELVE CANS

The twelve litter cans in the general vicinity of the cafeteria overflow by 2:00 p.m. every day. More cans may answer part of the problem but then the number of bins necessary might result in a Commons encircled by cans taking up what little room students now have.

Inside the situation is no better. Jim Kurtz, a Commons employee for the last three semesters, said that there are just not enough bus stands available for those few students who would bus their own dishes.

The dilemma continues for the closing of the TUBs and the increase in enrollment has made the usually crowded conditions almost farcical.

SPACE

More help could answer some of the problems of trash inside but again space is the stumbling block. One Commons employee attempted to clear some garbage strewn tables but was unable to get through the crowds of students to reach the littered tables. This was at 3:00 p.m.; at noon the problem is all but insurmountable.

A former Commons employee, Morey Wolfson, stated simply, that not enough of the students cared to bus their own garbage whether inside or out.

The consensus of employees seemed to agree though none were angry. "After all, I never tried to help or paused to say thank you to anyone who bussed my dishes for me before I came to work here," declared one worker.

COST

It costs the college $2500 a month to haul away the refuse left by students and many times that in wages paid to people who do the cleaning up every day. It is both an endless and expensive task, but one necessary in a community of over 18,000.

A cure, if there is one, has yet to be found. And until a solution is arrived at, the situation may continue to deteriorate. Meanwhile, those twelve garbage cans and that one man will attempt to stay ahead of a problem that no one seems to be able to solve.

President's concern Editor:

I have recently asked Dean (Ferd) Reddell to do two things: (1) to thank the many students who worked so hard in the complicated business of registering 17,000 here, and (2) to review, with the appropriate students and staff, our basic systems for admission and registration. I am hopeful that from such a review we will be able to obtain additional equipment or anything else needed to make our registration procedures more efficient and equitable.

I hope you and your colleagues will not hesitate to bring to our attention any suggestions for the further improvement of our admissions and registration procedures.

Sincerely,
John Summerskill
President

(We trust that the tone of recent Gater articles on this fall's registration has not implied full condemnation, because that was not their aim. Rather, resigned to the traditions of long lines for pre-reg, long lines for registration, and long lines after reg (to add and drop courses) — not to mention long lines for health exams and various other entrance tests — we choose to blame the gods in Sacramento.

Each year, in reply to "Why can't our registration be by mail, or this way, or that?" officials shrug and finger dollar signs in the air.

Your concern is commendable; the Gater is planning, through communications with other comparable state colleges, a series of articles on registration and possible improvements (through methods other than financial windfalls); and we are inviting those students who sat on the lawn tearing Red apart to transfer their grievances onto paper. — Editor.)

'Press release'? . . .

Editor:

Last Tuesday, the Daily Gater carried violently anti-administration diatribe splashed over half the front page.

While there is nothing wrong with reporting the on-campus activities of the VDC, the Gater flagrantly violated the most sacred journalistic ethic, that of objectivity. The "article" sounded like a VDC press release.

The article lacked quotes and reported statements by the Vieniks (sic) as facts.

The Daily Gater is owned and operated by the Student Body of San Francisco State College, not the Viet Nam Day Committee, and should keep its editorial comments out of the news.

Where is our biggest challenge — in space, or on some battlefield? SF State's rock 'n' roll workshop

A rock 'n' roll workshop is being organized here as part of the Communications and Arts area of the Experimental College.

Organizer Jack Fronk said the workshop idea "evolved from the music's potentials as the most exciting and creative art form today."

Fronk has had wide experiences in medieval and modal music, and the latest in rock 'n' roll.

SOUND AND LIGHT

The course is an attempt to "intensify and synthesize the technical and artistic resources of rock 'n' roll, sound and light, drama, poetry, and electric sound production, in which all events are expressed and developed through the joyful dance medium," Fronk said.

"Imagination must open beyond the restrictions and hesitations of commercial rock 'n' roll," he said.

"Once we have begun to integrate our otherwise segmented and individually limited art media," he continued, "perhaps we can evolve a

A new Experimental College workshop, under the direction of Jack Fronk, will study the music of such groups as The Great Society, shown here during last spring's Contemporary Arts Festival, and the possibilities for integrating rock 'n' roll sound with poetry, drama, and lights.

Venezuelan students begin aid program

Eighteen Venezuelan students of municipal administration will arrive on campus today to begin a seven week work-study program co-hosted by SF State and the government's Aid to International Development (AID) program.

Backed by $25,000 from AID funds, the Venezuelans aim to return to Caracas with a better understanding of municipal organization. Outside their classes, they will work with civic leaders in San Bruno, Redwood City and Mountain View.

Leo Cagan and Donald Barnhart, associate professors of political science, will supervise the program.

Mesembryanthemum Aequilaterem means ice plant.

According to William W. Charleston, Chief of Plant Operations, the college site was part of the old Ingleside golf course, explaining the presence of small groves of Pinacea and Cupressus, commonly known as pine and cypress trees, by the HLL, AD, and gym areas.

These large trees, estimated to be between 65 and 75 years old, are reaching the end of their natural life span and are slowly being replaced by Monterey pines, planted in three gallon cans, which grow to a height of 20 feet.

PE budget hops 1st hurdle

By JAMES LOVELAND

Intercollegiate athletics at SF State, almost doomed last Spring by a critical budget cut, received a breath of life Tuesday when the AS Finance Committee unanimously approved a supplemental $3800 for the PE Department.

The final decision as to whether or not the additional funds can be received will be voted upon today at the AS Legislature meeting.

The original budget was lowered from $50,943 to $48,443 because the AS didn't have the money to allocate.

'BARE BONES'

Acting athletic director Allen Abraham argued his case at the committee meeting when he said the original budget was "bare bones already and with the loss of the $2500 it means further cut-backs and even possible abandonment of several minor sports."

Far West Conference rules state if any league member fails to field teams in all sports, it is subject to expulsion from the conference. SF State could then be forced to become an independent intercollegiate sports school, with a considerably higher budget requirement than its present request, or else drop intercollegiate sports entirely.

The financial picture is further blackened since the football team this year is forced to play all of its home games at Lowell High's field because Cox Stadium is still undergoing reconstruction.

"The fee we have to pay to rent Lowell's field is a minimum of $126 a game. It could reach $300 when all other costs are figured in," Abraham said.

He reasoned that since the team has to play at Lowell, this would drastically lower the attendance, and consequently the gate figures, estimated last Spring, would be lower than anticipated. Thus another drop in expected revenue.

All of this coupled with a

ESTIMATES

"Estimates of income for both football and basketball (set by the legislators at $7500 and $6000 respectively — on the basis of gate receipts) are unrealistically high," Fessenden said.

Therefore the request for the additional $3800 includes a $1000 subsidy to cover the loss of the anticipated income.

Secondly he said, "Cuts made in several of the operational budgets have been too severe. In all, it amounts to only $3800, but it could mean the difference between a successful operation and a financial debacle."

proposed raise in the price of admission convinces Abraham that practically no one will go to the games. If the additional funds are approved the price of tickets will not be increased.

INADEQUACY

In a letter to AS President Jim Nixon this summer, Douglas Fessenden, then director of the division of health, physical education and recreation, stressed the inadequacy of the present budget.

The original estimate of cost and income submitted to the legislature was pretty close to rock bottom, Fessenden said.

"It certainly had no fat," he continued. "I cannot believe that any real intent to cripple the operation exists — nevertheless I have very little confidence in our ability to get through the year on this budget as it is presently constituted."

Unless the additional funds are forthcoming the athletic program stands to be hurt in two ways, he said.

Vets lead water polo team against top rated Stanford

By DON CLEMONS

Blessed with a host of veterans and many promising transfers, the SF State water polo team opens the 1966 campaign against Stanford, Thursday, September 29.

Led by All-Conference star Jim Dunn, who has been slowed somewhat by an early season injury, the Gator returnees include Fred Kennelley, Don Davis, Brian Lahren, Al Stanbridge, and Rusty Mills.

Davis, who sat out last year, is battling to win back his first string berth of two seasons ago. Stanbridge is regarded by Coach Walt Hanson as a "much improved player, who should help this season."

A transfer who has drawn praise from the coach is goalie Steve Harper, who is expected to replace graduated star Mike Mullins. Other transfers counted on to help are Mike McColly and Larry Rogers.

The Gators compete in the Far Western Conference where the University of California at Davis is picked as the team to beat. They also participate in the Northern California Water Polo League. In the latter the competition is much stiffer as it includes such powerhouses as Stanford, San Jose State and the University of California at Berkeley. All three teams are currently rated among the top ten college water polo teams in the country. The University of Pacific rounds out the NorCal loop.

Barring injuries and with the emergence of more depth, the Gators can be expected to hold their own in the upcoming campaign.

Gators on KRTG

Campus radio station KRTG will broadcast Gator home football games for the first time in its five year history. The games will be transmitted to the dormitories and Commons area via a special transmitter and telephone lines.

Handling the play-by-play will be KRTG sports director Steve Somers, assisted by former Gator football star Pete Liebengood.

Somers has experience as a baseball announcer and was known last year as "The Golden Voice of the Gator Nine."

Somers will handle other sports activities throughout the year including wrestling, basketball, and baseball.

The games will be sponsored by Roos/Atkins, Toto's Pizza, Florsheim Shoes and Charlie Mallon's Physical Culture Studio.

Gator soccer team opens season against Vikings

The Gator junior varsity soccer team kicks off its 1966 campaign today against Diablo Junior College.

The home encounter starts at 3:30 p.m. on the Women's Playground.

The game will be refereed by Diego DeLeo, the director of soccer referees for the Western Hemisphere. DeLeo is in the Bay Area for a two week clinic to promote soccer as a vital new force on the United States sports scene.
