

The farmer they were assigned to - upon their arrival showed the 6 men and 1 woman ~~and~~ a child a miserable one room shack in the center of a cattle feed lot with no furnishings and only some dirty old straw to sleep on. These men refused to live under such filthy conditions and sought out a relative they knew not far from there, who helped to arrange another assignment where they were provided with an old but substantial building which they were able to convert in to reasonably comfortable quarters.

They had to work hard on a farm that had no modern equipment - horse drawn equip and everything hard work - spending most of their time harvesting sugar beets that were the size of carrots - hard back breaking work for men unaccustomed to this type of labor. Late Ray moved to another employer in Idaho.
